GENERAL Nagib is a stronger man today than he was three months ago. His military junta has felt bold enough to take sovereign rulership upon itself; and his Liberation Rally which has sprung up in the stead of the proscribed political parties, claims to have an actual membership of two millions and a potential membership of six millions. His Sudam policy, moderate — at least in form — by comparison with the policy of King Farouk and Nahas Pasha, has been acclaimed by the populace, and agreement with Britain skill be regarded as a triumph, especially if followed by British evacuation of the canal zone. Triumphs in Egypt are of course, the easiest thing in the world; and the present sulgra in Cairo have cleverly exploited every British cormal powersment expressly recognizes the right of the Sudanese transitions and the appropriate time and with the necessary safeguards, "Mr. Eden said. the evacuation of the British should be considered as a "distant target, for which we must mobilize our material and spiritual resources" Perhaps he only meant that whilst the mobilization of Egypt's material and spiritual resources were a continuing need, no impelling motive, capable of stirring the public, had yet been found to take the place of the British "occupation." For, whatever he may have gained in the Sudan, and may yet gain in the canal sone, General Nagib has an arduous, and hazardous struggle before him if, without the excitements of his "liberating" programme or of external adventure, he is to keep the loyalty of a people disinclined to accept the hard and gradual process of social and economic relorm.

HAKIRYA, Thursday. — Commenting on the Soviet Union's decision to break off diplomatic relations with Israel, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said that the formal motivation of this step was a mere pretext.

The decision was, in effect, a culmination of the campaign of virulent slander and outspoken hostility against Israel, the Zionist movement, Jewish organizations and Jews as such, which has been conducted within the Soviet bloe for a long time past and has within the last few months been ominously gaining momentum, he said.

The true purpose is the utter of the said that Mr. P. Yershov, Russian Minister to Disrael, and been ordered home and requested Mr. Eliasbiv and his staff to leave the Soviet Union without delay.

The note accused the Israel press and Government officials "of openly instigating hostile activities" against the Soviet Union and said, "The terrorist act of February 9 is evidence of the contempt of Israel for the elementary conditions for normal diplomatic activities of representatives of the Soviet Union."

CONDUCTOR WANTED

Sir, — I read in the POST

Tread with dismay in conductor was seeking a Legation.

This incident will surely have the most unpleasant repercusions for our country. It will neither help our persecuted brethren in the Soviet countries, nor rouse special sympathy for their fate in the free world. Such terrorist actions serve only to do us harm.

The tendesways of our rolles.

Seed to any svaliable conductor living in this country. I was therefore most surprised that the freign conductor had been asked to fill the post. Surely if the IP.O. announces through the indicator of the press that it is looking for a conductor, one could be found among those already living here?

This carrier group, led by the new giant 40,000-ton carrier H.M.S. Eagle, is the biggest British conglomeration of power the Mediterranean has ever seen, Second World War included. The reasons behind this unprecedented show of strength are two-fold: to give some weight and backing to Admiral Mountbatten who was elected to the NATO post in spite of American objections and to test Mediterranean defence.

Should war break out, the primary task of the Royal Navy would be to secure the safe arrival of ships earrying arms and vital civilian supplies in face of underwater and air attack. In this the Royal Navy's doctrine differs from that of the United States Navy which believes, that the best defence is offence and should be effered a first-class guest conductor to result of the run, not allowing the market benefits and forcentrate in packs and force Navy places upon mine warfare as a primary form of attack, the

For these reasons, I believe it to be bad policy to wear any pld thing at home, to go without a trace of make-up and never to buy special working telothes for the house. It is a qually had policy to spend a lot of money on one special dress to be worn two or three times a year, which is bound to be out of fashion before it has been worn half a dozen times. And if that special dress happens to be off the shoulder or strapless, it will take quite a number of "wearing hours" to get used to it. Any woman who wears that kind of a dress for the first time can't help wondering when the darned thing is going to slip down, and unless she has worn it for quite a while at home prior to her first. TALES OF HUMAN ISOLATION

Sieculars Stoughten Miffilm, Botton, 751 pp.

A retrospective view of 15 years of fiction by Mrs. McCullers reveals a remarkable unity of development, with respect to both themes and style. The period is bounded by her first novel, "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter" (1936, written at the age of 22), and her last novelia (this volume's title story), which carries all the elements of vision and technique in her previous work to a new pitch of perfection. In between are six abort stories, and two novels: "Reflections in a Golden Eye" and "The Member of the Wedding" (the latter was also produced as a play). Her first was the most ambitious in sine (350 pages), allowing for complexity of structure and an attempt at a cross-section of a southern community; all the rest have a compact brevity ("The Ballad" is only 63 pages) reminiscent of the short novels of Henry pact brevity ("The Ballad" is only 63 pages) reminiscent of the short novels of Henry James Yet these modest tales have the immodest qualities of digging into the reader's guts and haunting his memory.

They all play variations on the single theme of what a critic has recently called "spiritual isolation" (Oliver Evans, in "New World Writing," the New American Library): Lonely individuals in a strange ly individuals in a strange world — of great paradoxica beauty Such a capsule state-ment may suggest the roman-tic sentimentalism of a Shelley; but the base of realistic observa

Symbolism and Hermony
Her method of many-levelled meanings reaches its culmination in "The Ballad." In "The Heart" novel, the "New York
Café," with its kindly, philosophical proprietor, was used as the nerve-centre of a town "in the middle of the deep South": the nerve-centre of a town "in the middle of the deep South"; and the central figure, Mr. Singer, was a deaf-mute who, because of his very inability to communicate with, or receive communication from the others, became a prime mover in their lives — and a symbol of their final frustration. His suicide coincides with the failure of all "The Ballad" distills the es-sence of this situation, but the central image is transformed from that of a sort of orchestrated isolation to that of a circular chain: the masculine woman has rejected normal love; she falls in love with an effeminate, hunchbacked dwarf; but the dwarf in turn falls in oted a resemblance, the triangle is reminiscen; of Sartre's Heil in "No Exit.") In an appended parable of a chain gang of prisoners, the ironic moral is drawn that "12 mortal men who are together" (in chains!) can create "music that causes the heart to broaden and the listener to grow cold with ecstasy and fright."

The qualities of this prose-poem are described with preci-sion by "ballad," a term which makes explicit the folk sources of Mrs. McCullers' art; her musical sense of organization or Mrs. McCillers art; her musical sense of organization (as in the concluding part of "The Heart" with its four movements or Morning, Afternoon, Evening, and Night); her constant use of musical materials and metaphors; the harmony of her style, with its exquisite sense of rhythm and uses of refrain and variations on a theme; the classical unity and economy of her story-telling (which the "Reflections," for example, achieves by concentrating on the situation in the "artificial" setting of an army camp in peace-time); and the final sense of realistic-fantastic legend which results. Such a unique fusion of disparate elements must be read to be believed:

These wonderful tales should have a special appeal to the Israel reader. Though the Negro problem tends to dominate, be-cause of the Southern setting, their authoress is profoundly aware that the plight of the alien Jews is another arche-typal symbol of her recurring pattern There are constant hints in "Th. Heart" that Mr. Singer must be a Jew (part of
